

New Mid-Atlantic StatNet to Hold Second Meeting in May in Washington, D.C.

Collins Center Chosen as a Partner for the Initiative, Partially Modeled after New England StatNet

In partnership with the Collins Center, three Washington D.C. area jurisdictions have taken the lead to form a regional performance management practitioners' consortium dedicated to sharing best practices and benchmarking across the national capital region. Following a successful initial meeting last October, managers from Fairfax County and the City of Alexandria, Virginia, and Montgomery county, Maryland are planning the second meeting for jurisdictions and organizations stretching from the suburbs of Philadelphia to Virginia Beach that are.

The spring 2014 meeting of Mid-Atlantic StatNet will take place on May 8 in Washington, D.C. at the training center for the Performance Institute (<http://www.performanceinstitute.org/>), another invaluable partner in bringing this effort to fruition. In addition to engaging speakers, networking, and information sharing opportunities, Mid-Atlantic StatNet is borrowing New England StatNet's practice of devoting meeting time to compare and contrast data and practices around a single service area. The meeting will focus on permitting and inspection services, with the discussion to be led by the Collins Center.

Mid-Atlantic StatNet plans to hold meetings twice a year to bring together the region's devotees committed to leading edge and best practice performance measurement and operational improvements that serve to enhance service delivery and the quality of life for regional residents, businesses, and visitors. For more information about this initiative, please contact Bill Yake at William.Yake@fairfaxcounty.gov, Greg Useem at greg.useem@alexandriava.gov, or Dave Gottesman at david.gottesman@montgomerycountymd.gov.